

CONTRIBUTORS

CHANDLER SHAW graduated from WTAMU in the spring of 2015. She is currently studying for her PhD in English at Boston College, and lives in Sommerville, Massachusetts. Her research focuses on post-WWII American creative nonfiction. Chandler is interested in how storytellers use narrative to shape community bonds and national identities.

SHANNON BERTRAND (NÉE OSBURN) graduated from WTAMU in 2015 with a bachelor's degree in English, after which she obtained her teaching certificate from WT's PACE program. She now teaches high school level English in the Amarillo area.

LANCE LOMAX graduated with a BA in English from WT in 2015. He is currently pursuing a doctoral degree in Film & Media Studies at Texas Tech University. His research interests include transpacific studies, adaptation, and the industrial and generic aspects of Japanese cinema.

MICHAELA WEGMAN graduated in December 2015 with a Bachelor of Arts in English from WTAMU. She studied the Little Red Riding Hood fairy tale and discovered the character's long history of independent agency. Michaela is currently a graduate student working on a master's thesis in art history at WTAMU.

OLIVIA TRABYSH (WT Grad 2015) is a Program Officer at the Jessie Smith Noyes Foundation and designer pursuing her MFA at the New York School of Interior Design. She works at the intersections of culture, politics, justice, and technology to create spaces that advance the dignity and wellbeing of communities.