

Data Bite #8 – Course Evaluations

Course Evaluations

Course evaluations are a vital part of improving the educational experience for both students and faculty. Each semester, students have the opportunity to provide valuable feedback that helps shape the quality of instruction, course structure, and overall academic environment. It's a chance for your voice to be heard, whether you're celebrating what went well or suggesting improvements for the future. By taking just a few minutes to complete evaluations, you're helping create a better university experience for everyone.

On average, 65% of students complete their course evaluations, contributing to over 20,000 evaluations every semester. That's a powerful collective voice, and every response counts. Your feedback is reviewed by instructors and academic departments to identify strengths and make data-informed changes where needed. It's more than just a survey, it's your direct line to shaping academic quality and student success.

Don't miss your chance to make a difference this semester. Whether your course was exceptional or could use a few tweaks, let your thoughts be known. Be a part of the feedback this semester, respond and help make your university even better. After all, your experience matters, and your feedback drives progress!
